

CI 112 J Hipkins
7 July 2011

First name: James

Last name: Hipkins

Q1: New framework, our system should be brought in line with international levels, US, UK etc

Q2: Introduction of an R18+ rating

Q3:

Q4: It would save a lot of time I assume?

Q5: Potentially impactful content designed for adults should be reviewed and classified As adult material

Q6: No, I would think regardless of the publisher the same rules should apply

Q7: Seems a little silly, but as video games are now classed as art...

Q8: Put the adult explicit language tag on the front, but I don't think it's really classifiable like that?

Q9: Time permitting review everything, for the sake of practically, limited released media may be more time consuming then worthwhile

Q10: No

Q11:

Q12: Online content is out of the hands of a developer, you may clarify the basic game, but a designer can not predict an online experience.

Q13: This is the responsibility of the parent. Childeb can always bypass blockers and filters, parents need to take direct responsibility

Q14: This should be regulated at point of sale by retailers

Q15: Keep with the current system, movies games etc should be classified.

Q16: Government should set the rules, industry should regulate, and users should enjoy age appropriate content.

Q17: Yes! Great idea

Q18: Low impact, say M or below, any providers being found to be making false submissions should face severe punishment

Q19: When the cost of such classification be seen of significant financial detriment to the publisher

Q20: No, people see little difference between M and MA. I also think that many titles are forced into an MA rating when they should be reasonably classified above this, introducing an r18+ category would help to inform consumers

Q21: r18+

Q22: By adding R18+ to video games this would bring it more in line with movies

Q23: May be time for a review, 1995 was awhile ago, things may have changed.

Q24: Prohibited online? I agree that games/movies with exceptionally depraved content be restricted offline, bit Online restriction is a slippery slope and I do not endorse this.

Q25: As above it is a slippery slope to prohibit online media

Q26: Yes, the same system should be employed nation wide

Q27: Q28:

Q29: R 18+ first and most important step.

Other comments:

Please consider this honestly, with a what 98% reaponce rate of an 80,000 people survey, people want an R18+ rating
