First name: Chris

Last name: Lim

Q1:

Start by fixing the existing one so it is standard across all mediums. Video games is currently lacking an R18+ category.

Q2:

Provide information to the public as to the content of the media. It should serve as a guide and not restrict what adults can view.

Q3:

Yes. It is unlikely that the government has the manpower to classify all types of content. Even so, it should be self classified by the owner.

Q4:

Yes

Q5:

It should be self classified by the owner.

Q6:

It should be self classified by the owner.

Q7:

No

Q8:

No

Q9:

No

Q10:

No

Q11:

None, it should be self classified by the producer or owner of that content!

Q12:

Education of the general public on what the system means, not censorship!

Q13:

Education of the general public on what the system means, not censorship! This is the job of parents, not the government.

Q14:

Restrict sales to adults only venues

Q15:

Classification markings - always

Warnings/Consumer advice - mature content and above

Q16:

Government agencies - none

Industry bodies - classify the content they produce

Users - have choice as to whether they use the content or not.

Q17:

Yes

Q18:

ALL industries.

Q19:

Only if for some reason they can not self classify

Q20:

The lack of a R18 category for video games.

Q21:

The lack of a R18 category for video games.

Q22:

The lack of a R18 category for video games.

Q23:

Yes

Q24:

None.

Q25:

No, and it shouldn't. Adult should have choice as to what they view, whether or not it is illegal is up to law enforcement to deal with, not the classification board.

Q26:

Yes, and keep it standard for all mediums

Q27:

Q28:

Q29:

Classification should be self-regulated by the industry (like the ESRB in the US)

Other comments:

Why is Australia so hell bent on classifying every single piece of media there is? Even the internet? If that is the case self-regulation by the affected industries is the only solution. "Protecting the children" is the responsibility of parents, NOT THE AUSTRALIAN GOVERNMENT.
