Q2:

Q3: No, because it doesn't matter what you use to access it will still have to same content no matter the platform.

Q4: No.

Q5: Yes.

Q6: No.

Q7: Yes.

Q8: No.

Q9: Yes.

Q10: No.

Q11: The content should also be classified depending on the demand of the content. For example Mortal Kombat 9 (2011).

Q12: The most effective way to control access to online content is the consumer him or herself. For example parents complain about online content yet they are stubborn to the fact that there are variety of software that they can use to protect their family from inappropriate content online, yet they complain to the general public because they don't know how to use that software.

Q13: The majority of platforms or browsers that can access this content already have options to control or filter what they can access. If the government was to control what Everyone saw on the internet that will be evil just like the Chinese government does to their people...freedom of speech duh!

Q14: With the use of over 18 ID. Simple.

Q15: All the time.

Q16: They should focus on making sure not to upset the majority of consumers like they did with Mortal Kombat 9 (2011).

Q17: Not if they make it worse than it is now. Just give us the R18 rating for game and everything will be fine.

Q18: Books.

Q19: Yes, small business content should be subsidized from classification.

Q20: The only confusion I have with it is why don't we have an R18 rating for games.

Q21: We need a R18+ rating for video games! Because we don't we miss out of a lot of content for example Mortal Kombat 9 (2011). Because we don't that game is banned! Un-ban it!

Q22: Use the same labels.

Q23: Yes.

Q24: None.

Q25: No. Nothing should be prohibited online.

Q26: Not really.

Q27: It shouldn't be a system where everyone agrees, its flawed because one person could say no and that will effect everyone negatively. It should be a majority rules system.

Q28: Yes.

Q29:

1. R18 rating
2. Un Ban Mortal Kombat 9 (2011)
3. Voting should be majority rules.

Other comments: Seriously, get R18 in for video games and un ban Mortal Kombat 9 (2011)...all the adult gamers in the country want it.
