Q1:

Develop a new framework for classification of all media.

Q2:

Greatly reduce or eliminate any censorship by creating appropriate categories and age based restrictions for content.

Q3:

Ideally NO.

Q4:

Yes, this would be an appropriate method of classification. Particularly for most of the media on the web.

Q5:

No, as in Q4 i think classification can be unclassified until it is subject to a valid complaint. At which point the media can be properly classified.

Q6:

No, as in Q4 i think classification can be unclassified until it is subject to a valid complaint. At which point the media can be properly classified.

Q7:

I think classification could be made voluntary in these cases. Or else have a standard classification i.e MA15+ unless otherwise classified.

Q8:

No, as in Q4 i think classification can be unclassified until it is subject to a valid complaint. At which point the media can be properly classified.

Q9:

No, as in Q4 i think classification can be unclassified until it is subject to a valid complaint. At which point the media can be properly classified.

Q11:

Classification can be unclassified until it is subject to a valid complaint. At which point the media can be properly classified.

Q12:

A classification rating notice applied to media which can be reviewed by an adult before consumption by a minor.

Q13:

A classification rating notice applied to media which can be reviewed by an adult before consumption by a minor.

Age based qualification at the time of purchase or viewing.

Q14:

At the time of purchase, the purchaser can be qualified by the party making the explicit material available. Penalty for breaches. As is the current case.

Q15:

When the content has been classified as restricted for minors.

Q16:

To review and classify material after complaints about unclassified material.

To police the availability of offline material.

Q17:

Yes, however i still think classification can be unclassified until it is subject to a valid complaint. At which point the media can be properly classified.

Q18:

TV, Movies, Music, Games, magazines, art, applications

Q19:

classification can be unclassified until it is subject to a valid complaint. At which point the media can be properly classified.

Q20:

Since our classification system is not in line with other countries, i.e we do not have an R rating for movies. this can be confusing when purchasing media from overseas.

Q21:

Yes there needs to be categories that can cope with any and all available media.

Currently some violent and sexual content is unavailable due to no classification available.

Q22:

Create standard categories that apply to all media and formats.

Q23:

Standard categories that apply to all media and formats should be made available. which include adult categories which are currently restricted or non existent.

Q24:

Child exploitation material should be prohibited. everything else should be available within restricted classification categories.

Q25:

No, the current system prohibits media and content which could be classified for adults.

Q26:

Yes, it should be federal based, and compatible with other country and region classifications.

Q27:

A federal based classification system. (see Q26)

Q28:

YES

Q29:

The process should be more transparent, with clear reasons given for classification levels and classification rulings.

Other comments:

The classification system needs to be transformed for the current (and future) media and content we now consume and access.

It has to be compatible with our media consumption and other classifications throughout the world.
