Q1: Definatly

Q2: Include an R+18 rating in line with the rest of the world.

Q3: No.

Q4: No.

Q5: Under certain certain circumstances. Yes.

Q6: No.

Q7: No.

Q8: If the current classification system is improved.

Q9: No.

Q10: Content is content it's classification should be the same, no matter where it is accessed.

Q11: Everything should be classified and it should be up to individual to use this recommendation as to whether they want to access this information/content.

Q12: Online identification system with proper age verification.

Q13: Better supervision by parents/guardians.

Q14: Better supervision by parents/guardians. Using installed child protection systems available on all modern gaming consoles.

Q15: As it is now.

Q16: Advisory, not as sensors!

Q17: Under certain circumstances yes.

Q18: Industry should be able to advise classification recommendations to any product however strict guidelines should be met.

Q19: Yes, the cost of classification in this country prevents a lot of independent content from being available in this country, which is disgraceful. Small/independent artists should not have to pay large fees for classification of their content.

Q20: Yes. However the lack of R18 rating for video games causes confusion as parents know what R18 is for dvd and other content so when purchasing an M15 game they may not be aware that this is the highest rating and may not be suitable for their children.

Q21: Yes. R18 for video games.

Q22: The classification should be consistent across the board, including an R18 for video games. The rules which affect the content rating need to be consistent so appropriate decisions can be made when accessing material.

Q23: Yes.

Q24: No content should be restricted however if the material is illegal etc. penalties for accessing the content should still apply.

Q25: No.

Q26: It is desired however a system where every Attorney General has to agree on classification changes is ridiculous and therefore each state in the case where consensus is impossible be allowed to decide for themselves.

Q27: R18 classification for video games.

Q28: Not necessarily.

Q29: Include an R18 rating for video games to bring Australia classification system in line with the rest of the world.
