In responding to the questions asked, I think that there should be a review of the games taking into account the age groups of users.

Consequently G rated games should have NO sex, violence in them as children do not these concepts. Consequently the next rating of PG should have what is presenting promoted for the G rating and so on.

I also would really like to see a National focus to classification and a realistic approach which takes into account the care of children at their various stages of emotional health. We should be protecting children of all ages from games which have adult concepts which they will find too much for them to grasp.

Ideally since children spend so much time on games there should be special classifications for children as there used to be on the TV so that parents can allow their children to play their games knowing that children will have no unauthorised introduction to adult concepts which parents do not want.

Adult games also can come into the hands of children so they should be restricted to what society feels is good.
