First name: Paul
Last name: Bayly

Q1:
I don't think we need a new framework. We just need consistency across movie,TV and game media.
Q2:
To provide a consistent classification of what is appropriate for which classification(age group) no matter what media.
Q3:
Yes, media which is discrete, such a movie or a game, can be easily classified before it is seen or played by a person as it will not be able to be sold here, so a classification system makes sense. Websites however will be impossible to classify and control access too as they are too numerous and are in constant change, it would be an a complete waste of money to consider classifying and blocking websites or other internet traffic.
Q4:
Q5:
Yes, generally people talk about the affect of violence and sexual content as being the main factors for classification. However religious indoctrination material is freely given to children when it should clearly be given an R18 rating.
Q6:
no
Q7:
no, I find the impact of classical art much lower then for media such as movies and games.
Q8:
No, I thought CD's etc already had warnings for explicit lyrics, this seems to be good enough.
Q9: Q10: Q11:
Q12:
There is no effective method for controlling online content, as there are so many websites which are subject to constant change it is ridiculous idea because it won't stop people accessing online material. Block one site and then it pops up in a 1000 other websites. A real world example of this is videos on youtube being taken down or blocked from under 18 users. These videos always turn up on some other website.
Q13:
Parental monitoring on what their children are seeing on the internet. Use of nanny type software at schools and home.
Q14:
Not sure why we would need to as I believe you have to be 18 to buy them at the moment anyway?
Q15:

If it is classified M15 or above, everything below is about the same type of content.

Q16:

Government agencies should regulate items sold in the country. Users should regulate content for the children on the home computer.

Q17:

I don't think so, seems that within the industry it would be to their benefit to lower classifications as it would mean more consumers could buy it.

Q18:

Religious indoctrination content, this content is very easy to identify and harms children for large periods of their life.

Q19:

Q20:

I think for the most part they are.

Q21:

maybe merge G and PG, seems kinda pointless to have both.

Q22:

have an R18 rating for TV and games so it is consistent with the movie classifications.

Q23:

Yes

Q24:

Nothing, it is to easy to get around one of your websites being blocked. Things like child pornography should be investigated as criminals by the police and interpol. I believe search engines already won't return results for illegal stuff like this, so it is very very hard for someone to access it by accident.

Q25:

Q26:

yes, should be the same across all states and territories.

Q27:

Q28:

Q29:

Other comments: