Q1:

I think developing a new, self regulated, framework would be the best choice.

Q2:

To help consumers make informed decisions about the media they consume.

Q3:

Yes. Content should only be classified where it is practical and important to do so.

Q4:

Yes. I believe that content such as internet pages and mobile apps should only be classified if a complaint is made.

Q5:

No, I do not believe so.

Parents are responsible for the media their children consume and so classification is not strictly necessary.

Q6:

No.

Q7:

No, artwork is expression and the UDHR right to freedom of expression should be respected.

Classification may be necessary, but restriction is disgusting.

Q8:

Classified, yes, regulated, no.

Q9:

No.

Q10:

No.

Q11:

Q12:

There is no effective method, all known methods to censor online content can, and have been, easily circumvented by free software such as Freenet and Tor.

Q13:

By better educating parents.

Q14:

Restrict sales in a fashion similar to alcohol to licensed retailers.

Q15:

When it is displayed in a place where the classification is relevant. For example, in a family video shop, all content should display classification. In an adult video store, no classification should be necessary. In a video game store, games should all show classifications.

Q16:

Government agencies should generally keep to themselves and act like the Governor General, coming in to fix everything when it breaks.

Industry should do most of the policing itself, similar to the US ESRB.

Users should always have the final decision about the media they consume, no restrictions should be made.

Q17:

Vastly. The industry is large and has power, the government does not.

Q18:

All.

Q19:

Where the cost of classification would otherwise inhibit production.

Q20:

No. MA+ is perceived as being 'Mature Adult' and many see it as a restricted classification.

Q21:

The Refused Classification category should be merged with R18+. The Government does not have the right to tell adults that they are not ready to view certain content.

The R18+ rating also needs to be extended to video games.

Q22:

Use the same classification markings for all media. Use the same classifications for all media.

Q23:

No opinion.

Q24:

Child pornography. Nothing else. The internet is an independent entity and cannot be regulated, censored, filtered or controlled. An attempt at doing so would have disastrous results. Such an attempt would be the height of foolishness.

Q25:

No. The only content that should be refused classification is violent rape, torture and child pornography.

Q26:

Yes. Classification should be consistent. I have no ideas as to promotion.

Q27:

Leave the system we have now, but do not refuse classification to any content.

Q28:

Yes.

Q29:

Do not refuse classification to any content.
