Q1:

They should develop a new framework.

Q2:

To standardise classification across all states in Australia, including an R18 for games classification to bring Australia in line with the rest of the world

Q3:

Everything should be classified regardless of the technological device being used to access the content. This should include classification for adult content for games (R18)

Q4:

No, all content should be classified

Q5:

Yes, as a father i want to know what content is suitable for my daughter at the various stages of her childhood.

Q6:

No, all content should be classified.

Q7:

Unsure about the impact of this question.

Q8:

Yes. All forms of media should be classified.

Q9:

No, it should be irrelevant.

Q10:

No. As long as there is a workable classification system which includes R18 for games there should be no differentiation as to the place of viewing the content.

Q11:

Q12:

I am unsure as to how access to this content is controlled at present so cannot give an opinion.

Maybe by ISP's?

Q13:

I am a firm believer that online content access is the responsibility of the parents. Education of the public is key to this. Make people be responsible for the content viewed by their children. We do not need a nanny state approach, we need people who are not as technically literate as others to be educated.

Q14:

This really comes down to small businesses being responsible for viewing ID prior to purchase to ensure minors are not buying this type of content.

Q15:

All content where appropriate should be classified.

Q16:

Government should setup the framework, Industry bodies should administer the classification system, users should have input into any classification decision if deemed incorrect, and there will be times when items will be disputed.

Q17:

The current arrangements are broken in the fact that they are antiquated. Overhaul to allow for this generation of content to be fully classified includign R18 for games.

Q18:

Everything should be submitted for classification. reduced fees to submit would be prudent.

Q19:

Australian created media could have its classification fee subsidised.

Q20:

Lets face it. No R18 for games is the sticking point here. Unfortunately this form of content under the current system is lacking the standardisation of other forms of media. Games content should be regulated and classified in the same way as other forms.

Q21:

Bring in R18 for game content

Q22:

Standardise the graphics used to display content classification across all media.

Q23:

Q24:

All content that in Australia is "Refused Classification"

Q25:

I assume so but do not know any details as to what is currently RC content.

Q26:

Federal government should implement the framework across all states. This should be a national classification system.

Q27:

As above. Federal government should be responsible for all states. One classification system accross the country.

Q28:

Yes

Q29:

Adding R18 classification for games

Other comments:

As a 39 year old parent, a productive memeber of society with full time professional employment and a gamer, i feel this country is not allowing me to consume games content that i would wish to play in my free time which lets face it is limited due to the nature of my life as a parent and worker. The majority of content i consume is actually fine but occasionally something is refused classification becasue we are lacking R18 for games.This is why the system needs to be changed.

I would like the introduction of R18 for games as well as a general overhaul of a system that has just become outdated. Modernise and standardise to a national system of classification.
