Q1:

Don't know

Q2:

To provide the most amount of material possible to the appropriate audiences

Q3:

No

Q4:

No

Q5:

I don't understand what is meant by impact here.

Yes, as answered above, classification shouldn't be determined by media type.

Q6:

No

Q7:

No

Q8:

Classified yes, regulated no.

Q9:

No

Q10:

Are you talking about restricting access to, or classifying material? Classification should be independent of where material is viewed. However it might not be pertinent to display 'R' rated material on the side of a primary school.

Q11:

I am beginning to doubt my understanding of what is meant by 'classified'

Q12:

I don't think too much effort should be spent on trying to restrict access to online material, rather if certain material is classified as illegal, the time should be spent tracking users that are viewing this material.

Q13:

By their parents / guardians.

Q14:

As is.

Q15:

I like the way movies / videos are classified and displayed. Whether this needs to extend to music I'm not sure, I really like the aesthetic of album covers and would prefer them not to be plastered over.

Q16:

Gov. defines general guidelines for classification. Industry bodies apply the guidelines to material.
Users object when necessary to either the application, or the guidelines where appropriate.

Q17:

Yes

Q18:

I don't understand the question.

Q19:

How do you subsidise a classification? Pay the small indy film maker for making an X rated film because their market will be correspondingly smaller? Doesn't make sense to me. I think my answer is no.

Q20:

I think so. I don't understand the lack of an R classification within games though.

Q21:

No

Q22:

Put them on games!

Q23:

Yes

Q24:

Obviously anything already deemed illegal. I don't like the idea of a black list of sites though. I'd rather see an attempt to trace people who are accessing material that is considered illegal.

Q25:

Don't know.

Q26:

I liked having Canberra as an outlet for porn and fireworks, especially as it's not much good for anything else.

Q27:

What are you expecting here, some random public member to do your job for you??

Q28:

Yes

Q29:

An integrated approach across all media.

Other comments:

I dislike - Internet filtering

- Restriction of games into Australia because there is no R rating system.
