Q1:

With the failure of the current framework to take any breaches seriously, a new framework should be developed.

Q2:

As a father of three children, I am appalled at what my children are exposed to in the media on a daily basis. The primary objective of a national classification scheme should be to listen to the call of us parents and effectively regulate the content that they are exposed to. What is most sickening is the rise of hyper-sexualised content. Any content that may be contrary to what parents want their children to see should be managed through a precautionary approach.

Q3:

Q4:

No. An effective complaints mechanism should be developed. The current form of regulation has not worked. The media has been pushing the boundaries so there needs to be better regulation before the complaint is made.

Q5:

A more objective classification system should be developed, with more strict limits on any sexual content harmful to children.

Q6:

Q7:

Yes. Artistic merit should have nothing to do with the classification especially when any sexual or child degradation content is involved.

Q8:

Yes. It is appalling how much sexual content and suicidal themes are coming through music that should not be heard by children.

Q9:

Q10:

Q11:

Our views as parents should have more importance when classifying content.

Q12:

Mandatory ISP filtering would stop any illegal content from reaching our children. Anyone wishing to view restricted content can access it after determining user's age.

Q13:

Again, mandatory ISP filtering with education for parents and children on how to safely navigate the web and the dangers that are involved.

Q14:

The current classification system has failed here. Each issue of these magazines should be classified and they should only be sold from separate premises that children cannot access.

Q15:

Q16:

Q17:

No way! The current form of regulation has failed with a perpetual stream of breaches by content providers. It would only be worse if they were left to classify the content themselves.

Q18:

Q19:

Q20:

Q21:

The new R18+ classification for videogames will see new and more violent/sexualised content than is currently available to our children. This is not in our nation's best interests or my best interests.

Q22:

Q23:

Q24:

Any R18+, X18+ or RC content. R18+ could be made available by age verification.

Q25:

No. R18+, X18+ and RC content should be prohibited because no chances should be taken if children could possibly access this content. It should not even be a possibility that they access this content!!
