Q1:

I believe that the ALRC should be improving key elements of the existing framework.

Q2:

The primary objective should be meeting the level of classifications available to comparative countries and also improving the transparency of the classification system to make it easier for technologically ignorant parents to understand what their children will be viewing/playing.

Q3:

Studies have shown that the effect from playing video games is larger than film as video games are an active activity not a passive one. I think that classification should be less forgiving when reviewing the themes in video games because of this.

Q4:

I think the current system is fine it just needs to be adjusted to include

Q5:

The potential impact should be looked at before a product needs to be classified
