Q2:

The Introduction of an R rating for computer video games and an overall reduction of content classified as RC

Q3:

Digital media is easily copied, refusing classification of digital media does not stop distribution to anyone interested in having it. For example. Giving a game an RC classification in Australia just means that the game will be widely pirated.

Q4:

If there is a significant number of complaints from a many unrelated parties, perhaps.

Q5:

The classification should describe the content to allow a person to make an informed decision on viewing the content. If the content is likely to offend someone it should be labeled as such, not refused classification.

I believe the term "Content designed for children" is too open to interpretation.

Q6:

Q7:

No, never.

Q8:

I'm happy for music and other recordings to be classified as long as they are never banned as a result.
