Television is disturbingly getting smuttier & smuttier, despite the children who are watching it. Could television stations please be required to refrain from showing sex-scenes and sexual kissing scenes and under-age children kissing scenes and sexual conotation scenes and language depicting sex organs in advertisements during children's viewing hours (such as Underbelly, Two and a Half Men, Family Guy etc. before 8.30pm). Sure, let the adults have their fun, but to submit children to such material on such a regular basis is surely paedophilic and irresponsible. It also sends a constant message to children and young people that they should prioritise fornication as an important achievement, which directly and indirectly supports so many of societiy's problems relating to irresponsible sexual behaviour. If I have sent this to the wrong department could you please pass it on.
