Q1:

The ALRC should develop a whole new framework to provide consistency across all forms of media.

Q2:

Provide consistency across all forms of media. eg Film, television, computer games

Q3:

No, content is content however it is accessed. One would anticipate that as the world progresses that new forms of content delivery will be established.

Q4:

No, the only content should be classified according to the same set of guidelines.

Q5:

All content should be classified. If it is designed for children or adults it should be classified accordingly.

Q6:

All content should be classified independent on how strong a market position the producer/distributor holds.

Q7:

Interesting supposition, not sure about art. Certainly some art is provocative and should not be viewed by minors/young adults, I would have thought this aspect of content could possibly be self regulated.

Q8:

Yes

Q9:

No

Q10:

No, content is content regardless of where it is accessed.

Q11:

In my opinion all content should be classified to similar guidelines

Q12:

Effective parenting and information

Q13:

Parenting and provide information to parents on how to monitor their children online.

Q14:

I'm not sure it needs to be.

Q15:

Anything classified MA 15+ or higher.

Other comments:

I'm an adult, yet I find some content restricted in the form of computer games. I think this is grossly unfair and two faced insomuch I can access R rated content at the movies which is not advertised or directed at children. It's well documented the majority of computer gamers are adult males and I would like to be treated as an adult and have the opportunity to play computer games that are designed and marketed at me.
