Q1:

From a gaming stand point, a new framework and classification system.

Q2:

To inform people about the choices in purchases they are about to make. And release the fears that bringing in a R18+ and higher classification is not going to harm anyone anymore than the current situation may be.

Q10:

Any content used at home or in a private setting should be less affected. Content used for public broadcasts should naturally be classified.

Q11:

Classification should be about providing consumer advice, not about restricting access.

Q12:

Q13:

The means to control potentially inappropriate content for children is already available for parents in many forms. Perhaps better education for parents is needed?

Q14:

Q15:

When ever it is deemed necessary or for any content that could be potentially used in a public broadcast.

Q24:

None. That is not to say that all content online is acceptable in my view or morally acceptable in today's society, regardless of location.

Q25:

No

Q26:

"Any differences between states would logically need to be justified and based on evidence. I struggle to see how that is possible on the basis of geographical location, but perhaps there are other relevant factors that can be proven to have an effect on the functionality of the system. Perhaps you should look into it." - Dominicus Lindquist
