Q1:

I believe a new frame work is needed, especially for video games.

Q2:

The classification scheme should provide clear guidelines to consumers and parents about the content a product contains.

Q3:

All content should be classified but online content, such a online multiplayer games, should be classified for it's content and be given a warning that this classification may not always be correct.

Q4:

Some content could be self classified by it's creator and if sufficient complaints is made then it can be reclassified.

Q5:

Impact is a hard thing to quantify, especially for an adult to judge the impact for a child. It should be taken into consideration but not too seriously.

Q6:

All content should be classified, even if it is self classified by it's creator.

Q7:

The artist should classify their exhibit.

Q8:

Yes, it should be classified.

Q9:

All content should be classified.

Q10:

All content should be classified.

Q11:

All content should be classified.

Q12:

It would be up to the creator of the online content to enforce it's classification.

Q13:

Parent's must take some responsibility in protecting their children.

Q14:

Take them off shelves, only sell them from the counter with a proof of age.

Q15:

Any product sold should display it classification on its cover/box/case.

Q16:

Government agencies should classify the content, industry bodies should enforce the restricted classifications and user, including parent of users, should self regulate the content they want to use.

Q17:

In some cases self regulation can work better, such as online content and artworks.

Q18:

Websites, online games, artwork, magazines, any content falling under the current "M" rating

Q19:

Creative Australians should always be encouraged to produce more works. Any content from an Australian creators should be subsidised.

Q20:

I think they are. The only one that causes confusion is the lack of an R18 rating for video games.

Q21:

I believe there is a need for an R18 rating for video games.

Q22:

Classifications should be consistent across all media formats.

Q23:

Yes.

Q24:

None. How would you enforce it anyway?
