Q1:

Yes they should as the current framework is incomplete and lacking in many areas and does not allow for complete choice.

Q2:

To thoroughly and completely classify ALL material into appropriate classification categories without bias or prejudice.

Q3:

No it should not. As people of all ages access content through all platforms classification of this type would be ridiculous.

Q4:

No it should not. If people are unhappy with certain content they should cease partaking of said content.

Q5:

No. No.

Q6:

No it should not. The producers, distributors or the potential reach has nothing to do with the actual content. Only the content matters when classifying.

Q7:

Yes as certain artwork may not be appropriate for all ages.

Q8:

No as audio does not have the same impact as visual or written.

Q9:

No. every one can make their own choices.

Q10:

Yes. As home is the only place where a person can guarantee who will be exposed to content the home should not be as classified in the same way as it is in public.

Q11:

Age of target audience. Example R18+ for adult targeted content.

Q12:

Appropriate user and parental supervision is the ONLY way to guarantee who accesses what content.

Q13:

As stated in the previous answer user parental supervision is the only fail safe way to monitor content access.

Q14:

RAte all sexually explicit content MA15+ and require sellers to verify the age of purchasers.

Q15:

When content contains any audible, visual, or written reference to subjects considered mature in nature.

Q16:

To monitor and enforce all classification guidelines.

Q17:

Yes as industries have a better grasp on who accesses their content and why.

Q18:

Content designed solely for adults.

Q19:

The classification of content should be subsidized when the creator is unable to do so themselves after exhausting all other avenues.

Q20:

Yes they are understood and none are confusing.

Q21:

Yes there is a great need for a new classification category in gaming media as adults are the largest procurers of games and deserve to access content specifically aimed towards their age group.

Q22:

Ensure all media is uniformly classified under a national standard that takes into account all types of content and allows for choices.

Q23:

No as each deals with different media and is not accessed by the same kinds of users.

Q24:

Any content that encourages users to pursue subject matter that disobeys or ignores the Human rights charter.

Q25:

No as content designed solely for adults is refused classification although it is not inappropriate for its targeted audience.

Q26:

Yes consistency of classification across all states and territories is very important and should be promoted through free media advertisement by those who have a vested interest in the media.

Q27:

A unified scheme that applies to all states and territories that would ensure that media content is classified to a national standard.

Q28:

Yes as state implementation of content classification has so far been insufficient and does not allow for all user groups.

Q29:

A national survey asking a varied base of people what content should be classified and what classification that content should receive.
