First name: Andrew

Last name: Murray

Q1:

Focus on creating a modern framework that is relevant to modern technology and consumer trends.

Q2:

Creation of a structured classification system that makes it easy for adults to make decisions about what is and isn't appropriate for minors, and that gives the adult the choice of being able to enjoy adult oriented media (games, movies etc.)

Q3:

No.

Q4:

No.

Q5:

This should be two separate questions. Potential impact is subjective, and so should play only a partial role in the classification process. Content designed for children should be tested with rigor.

Q6:

Only on the smaller end of the scale. In the case of small independent producers, classification may not be necessary unless a complaint is made.

Q7:

Yes, but only as a guideline.

Q8:

Yes.

Q9:

Yes, where content is only going to reach a insignificant portion of the population.

Q10:

No. Classification should be there to give consumers information.

Q11:

Q12:

Education. It is far to easy to bypass firewalls and content filters to make them effective, and just creates a blackmarket for media from overseas and those that know how to access it from Australia.

Q13:

Parental controls on digital media and parent education.

Q14:

Q15:

Same as now, more or less.

Q16:

Q17:

Q18:

swearing, sexual content, violence and drug use should all be in the adult category.

Q19:

Classification should not cost the producers of material. If the government wants to limit what consumers have access to, then they should be the ones to fund it.

Q20:

Classification as it is is a joke. Parents let their kids watch pretty much anything.

Q21:

Classifications at the moment are fine, but need to be extended across the whole range of available media. What needs to change is the education about what exposing minors to material that is not within their classification range might do.

Q22:

Q23:

Yes. Insofar as the recognition of computer games as identical to movies and similar media.

Q24:

The regulation of the internet is impossible.

Q25:

No.

Q26:

Yes. Territories are an outdated notion and should be turned into states.

Q27:

Q28:

Q29:

Give adults the right to chose.
