Q1:

Yes.

Q2:

Increase the range of classifications to include content which is suitable ONLY for people aged 18 years and over.

Q3:

No. Content should be classified no matter where the content is viewed.

Q4:

Content should be accurately classified before there is a chance to submit a complaint.

Q5:

Things on the internet couldn't be classified because websites have the potential to change, both subtly and drastically.

Q6:

Q7:

Yes

Q8:

Maybe classified in their own way. But I would find this difficult with slang, subtlety and innuendo in spoken language

Q9:

Q10:

Yes, people need to gauge the nature of content, through classification, in case the person is looking for content for someone other than themselves, or they need to take someone's age or maturity into account.

Q11:

Q12:

Q13:

Q14:

Have all such content in one place (such as one shelf in a shop), and have a recognised logo easily viewed near the content to notify people that the content is for people aged over 18.

Q15:

On the outside of packaging, on any advertising material, and in an intro screen in the case of media that is to be viewed such as games and movies

Q16:

Classify new items before they are released. Redo classifications after a period of 5 years.

Q17:

Q18:

Q19:

Q20:

The current classification is restrictive, especially for games because there is no adults only classification

Q21:

Adults only for games. (Similar to R18 in movies)

Q22:

Have a recognisable symbol for the rating and then display a brief list showing why it was classified so.

Q23:

If it helps make a classification of a product easier, then yes.

Q24:

Q25:

The current classification is not broad enough, therefore the RC should be reviewed and perhaps given a classification, even if it is a classification of VVB (Very Very Bad)

Q26:

Q27:

Q28:

Q29:

Allow for items of a serious nature, such as extreme violence, drug use, sex etc be classified and available for purchase, and rely on parents and guardians to act accordingly when getting content for children is involved
