Q1:

Improving key elements of the existing framework - video game classification already exists, but it needs to be improved.

Q2:

To add an R18+ classification and to take pressure off retailers and more on parents.

Q3:

No.

Q4:

Everything should have a classification.

Q5:

No, if everything is classified, then there are no problems for anyone. People will have more of an understanding of what things are and can decide what is appropriate for themselves.

Q6:

Sure, if people get offended by nude/macabre pieces of art, they have the right to be warned. However you can not go and stick a big R sticker on it. The rating should be ADVICE not a rule or law, as you cant stop a 13 year old from seeing a violent piece of art if their parent is ok with it.

Q7:

They have a good enough classification, against swearing. There is not enough grounds for having a fully fledged classification on the content of music.

Q8:

No.

Q9:

No.

Q10:

if it has the potential to offend someone (on reasonable grounds i.e. children being slaughtered in a painting=potentially offensive and people should be WARNED not TOLD that they should not see it if easily offended

Q11:

Do not restrict anything.

Q12:

Parents should decide if they can play video games.

Q13:

THIS THING IS TOO LONG WHY DO YOU KEEP ASKING THE SAME QUESTION OVER AND OVER AGAIN. LET THE AUSTRALIANS PLAY GAMES AND STOP BEING SO PROTECTIVE, THEY AREN'T YOUR CHILDREN FOR GODS SAKE

Q29:

The government works for the people, all we want is to know a little about the content of what we are purchasing before we get it. we dont need the government making our decisions for us or surrounding us with sponge to stop us from grazing our knees of the sidewalk when we crash. Other countries like Britain aren't such arseholes like you are.
