

CI 843 P Beeson

First name: Paul

Last name: Beeson

Q1:

The existing framework is satisfactory. It should simply be expanded to include video games.

Q2:

To ensure inappropriate content is not available to those likely to be damaged by it. To give consenting adults information to guide their choices.

Q3:

Internet content should not be classified, as it is a waste of time and money.

Q4:

Yes, needlessly classifying all content is a waste of time and money.

Q5:

Yes, the greater the impact the more likely it should be to be classified.

Q6:

No, there are better categories, such as its likely content.

Q7:

Yes, but only in very rare instances. Art is generally to be viewed with supervision.

Q8:

No.

Q9:

IT would be inefficient to classify all niche content, particularly when the likely audience knows what to expect.

Q10:

No, people should have the information they need to guide their choices regardless of the public/private setting.

Q11:

The likely success and effectiveness of self-classification.

Q12:

There really is no effective way. Perhaps signing up to voluntary blocking software, or increased parental supervision.

Q13:

Q14:

Parental control.

Q15:

When it is likely to offend.

Q16:

Industry bodies should self-classify. Governments should periodically check to ensure this is being undertaken correctly, using feedback from the users of said content.

Q17:

Yes. Issues would really only develop where content is aimed at children but contains mature content.

Q18:

Video games, pornography.

Q19:

In the majority of cases.

Q20:

Video game classifications are confusing.

Q21:

No, they work appropriately.

Q22:

Use them consistently across all media.

Q23:

Only if there is a problem and it would improve efficiency.

Q24:

Child pornography. Depictions of real crime that encourage illegal behaviour.

Q25:

Yes.

Q26:

Consistency is important. Establishing clear guidelines and use all classifications across all content, bar internet content which is impossible to control.

Q27:

Purely commonwealth.

Q28:

Yes. States should cede all power to the Commonwealth.
