Q1:

The focus of this, should be developing a system of classification which facilitates access to games, much in the same way that we have access to films, with appropriate restrictions on sale to minors.

Q2:

the objective should be to properly control gaming violence, and to apply them only to suitable audiences.

Q3:

no, if we are to classify games, it should be applied in the same way that movies, cinemas and television are currently.

Q4:

no, classification should be applied to all content.

Q5:

yes, all child related material should be moderated in the same way.

Q6:

no, just because something is produced by a larger company, it should not be classified differently.

Q7:

no, any artwork should be at a user discretion.

Q8:

yes

Q9:

no

Q10:

no

Q11:

Q12:

any broad level restriction to online material is ludicrous, as shown when the government attempted the filter, and it was bypassed within 2 hours by a juvenile

by the PARENTS. the onus does NOT lie with the government, but with the FAMILY. they should not be bypassing the responsibility.

Q14:

in regards to the internet, we are growing with a generation that knows more about the internet than their predecessors, any attempts to restrict access on a broad scale, rather than the sites themselves, is a pointless activity.

Q15:

always, no matter the material.

Q16:

government agency: set the regulatory infrastructure

industry body: regulate content as per the government set infrastructure users: ensure that the content is going to the right people.

honestly, im shocked that this is such a hard thing for you to do, when other such systems have been implemented for a range of other things, look at fatigue management as an example...

Q17:

yes.

Q18:

G rated material

Q19:

all classifications should be run by a seperate body: OFLC

Q20:

M and MA.

one is simply advised, one is restricted

Q21:

no, nothing really needs to be changed, just that the same ratings need to be applied to games

Q22:

regulate all fields with hte same labelling

Q23:

no, these should mostly be scrapped, as they obviously havent worked. simply use the SAME guidelines that film uses.

Q24:

anything directly disallowed under the criminal law

Q25:

no

Q26:

OFLC runs all classifications, allowing this to no longer be a problem..

Q27:

this is really frustrating, because the solution is so simple, but the government seems affraid to act..
