

How we talk with people with disability

This information is in Easy English.

We use simple words and pictures to show some ideas.

Australian Government

Australian Law Reform Commission

The Australian Law Reform Commission is set up by the Australian Government.

Our job is to look at laws and decide whether they work well or not and if they are fair for everybody.

These are the rules for how we will talk with you.

They say:

- How we will include you in our work
- How you can get our information

How we will include you in our work

Sometimes we write about the law and people with disability.

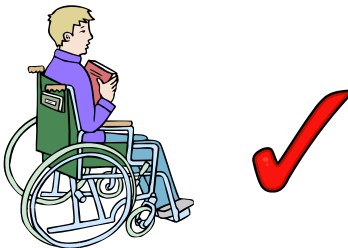

Then we ask you what you think. You can write or email to tell us.

Sometimes we meet with people with disability to talk about how the law affects them.

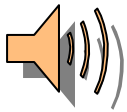

If you are meeting with us, we will ask what help you need to make it easy.

If you need it, we will make sure the meeting room:

- is ok for wheelchairs
- has handrails, ramps and lifts
- is near a disabled toilet
- has audio loops
- an Auslan interpreter

Our information

When we write about the law and people with disability we will try to write it in Easy English.

This means we use simple words and pictures to show ideas.

We put all our information on our website. We try to make our website easy to use for people with vision disability or physical disability.
