The future of law reform: Public Law

Wednesday 29th May 2019

5.30pm until 6.30pm

Law Building, University of NSW, Kensington Campus

The Australian Law Reform Commission and the University of NSW are pleased to present a panel discussion on the future of law and constitutional reform in Australia. The discussion will launch the ALRC's new project seeking public input to assist in identifying areas of Australian law which may benefit from reform. The project generally will be broad-ranging and will consider suggestions relating to any area of law. However, this panel event will focus on issues relating to public law and the Australian Constitution. In particular, the ALRC has identified a common theme in previous ALRC inquiries that the Australian Constitution has frequently presented challenges for the effective functioning of the legal system, or has constrained options for law reform. Expert speakers at this event will explore areas of public and constitutional law that may be ripe for future reform. Discussions and suggestions made at the event will be considered by the ALRC in developing a proposed multi-year programme of work for the consideration of the Commonwealth Attorney-General.

Join Professor George Williams AO, Dean of UNSW Law School, Justice Sarah Derrington, President of the ALRC, and a panel of experts for an interactive evening discussing law reform priorities with the potential to shape the future of Australian law.

Places are limited. Registration is free: eventbrite.com.au/e/61677270376.
