

From: [REDACTED]
To: Anti Discrimination Law
Subject: Support the rights of religious schools so that children are taught the importance of caring for others, supporting ideals of Justice and mercy towards others.
Date: Friday, 17 February 2023 8:25:37 AM

---

Dear Australian Law Reform Commission,

Below is my submission to the ALRC Religious Educational Institutions Inquiry's consultation paper:

I am encouraged by some of the points contained in the four propositions. For example, proposition D states, "Religious educational institutions should be able to expect all staff to respect their institutional ethos. A religious educational institution should be able to take action to prevent any staff member from actively undermining the institutional ethos of their employer." It also proposes: "Religious educational institutions should be able to impose reasonable and proportionate codes of staff conduct and behaviour relating to respect for the institution's ethos, subject to ordinary principles of employment law and prohibitions of discrimination on other grounds."

However, the last point in Proposition D effectively counteracts the above principles by saying, "Respect for an educational institution's ethos and codes of conduct or behaviour should not require employees to hide their own sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, marital or relationship status, or pregnancy in connection with work or in private life, or to refrain from supporting another person with these attributes."

One example of how this last point will play out in practice is given in the consultation paper itself: "a school could not terminate the employment of a lesbian teacher on the grounds that she was actively undermining the religious ethos of the institution merely by entering into a marriage with a woman." I entirely disagree with this. If a Christian, Jewish or Muslim school cannot speak against something as blatantly opposed to their religious teachings as this, the whole ethos of the school will be changed.. If schools are to uphold religious principles and give students examples to follow, they must retain the right to consider important factors, such as a public homosexual marriage or publicly acting as the opposite gender, when making employment decisions.

This is why I call upon you to support, rather than remove, these rights of religious schools so that Australia can maintain its diversity of education. Many people send their children to Religious Schools because of the ethos which is sadly lacking in Public Schools.

Yours sincerely,

Janine Rankin

[REDACTED]