

To,
Australian Law Reform Commission.

Response to Religious Educational Institution and Anti-Discrimination Laws.

The parents of the students in Christian schools pay almost 100 times more than a public school system and 3 times more than a Catholic Schools to have their children to be brought up in Christianity based education.

This law would be like bringing a law that would state that you will have to pay $200k for a luxury car but you cannot have any luxury features in that car because people who drive cheaper car feels discriminated.

If government tries to bring the law into effect then they will have to pay for 100% schooling of the children without any compromise to their quality of education and faith as parents pay that extra money from their hard earned income to provide an education that they prefer their children to have.

In my opinion, this will surely put extra load on the already overloaded public education system as parents will not shed extra money out of their own pockets in an institution where their worldview has no value and is being contradicted.

Thanks,
Elvin
