[REDACTED]

Thank you for your communication.

The issue I continue to have, and which is not addressed, is when a false and knowingly false allegation of the sexual abuse of a child is made.

I hold correspondence from 3 jurisdictions across 2 States confirming that a child was hawked around and that efforts were made to have her confirm the allegation.

The allegations were made to my workplace (costing me my employment) and within society at large, doing great damage - then there was the damage inflicted on the child.

This was an assault on a child.

But no-one is interested and I present down to gender

The individuals making the allegation and doing the damage they do walk free - never held to account.

This is just plain WRONG.

NB: I still hold the correspondence from the authorities in [REDACTED] where the allegation was first made and found to have no substance over 2 days of interrogation, from [REDACTED] where the allegation was subsequently made and found to have no substance and from the Department the allegation was then made to and again found to have no substance.

The child was interrogated in EACH of these jurisdictions.
